

Shashluk O., Chala K.

National University of Food Technologies (Kiev, Ukraine)

Wine tourism in the world

Purpose of work: is consider all possible options for trips to wine tasting and visits wine capitals of the world, and visit vineyards plantations

Objectives of the work: are present and talk about the country where growing and popular wine tourism is; Share the wine traditions in each country where this trend is represented by tourism.

Wine tours are among the most popular specialty vacations in the world today. Wine lovers are venturing far and wide to explore the world of wine, venturing not just to France for Bordeaux but to far-flung locations in Argentina, Chile, New Zealand, Australia, and even South Africa. Worldwide Wine Tours is a purveyor of winery information and helps travelers locate discount wine tours and wine travel opportunities in those exciting locations. Whether you're taking a wine vacation or just want to make wine a part of a bigger vacation, you learn the history of each country's wine industry, how to make travel preparations, which wineries to see and wines to taste, and what else to see and do during your travels.

Plan a Wine Vacation!

Planning California wine tours to such renowned areas as Sonoma and Napa as well as lesser known regions in the state. Find out about Paso Robles wineries and great wine coming out of Lodi – even southern California. The state of California is famous for its wines, and there are many regions to visit. California has been the undisputed king of wine in the U.S., but many of the country's best wines are now coming from the Pacific Northwest. It's true! Find out why the Pacific Northwest, including the Okanagan in British Columbia, can't miss summer vacation spot for wine lovers.

Argentina wine tour including the fantastic Mendoza. A wine vacation in Mendoza offers a broad range of choices for every budget and interest. And of course, whether you enjoy wines that are red or white, still or sparkling, dry or sweet, they are all waiting to be sampled in the peaceful beauty of Argentine wine country.

While in South America every wine lover should try to make time for a visit to Chile. Red wines produced in and around Santiago are distinct and wonderful. The wine industry in modern day Chile is a tale of two success stories – one at the upper end of the market and one at the lower end. In the last few decades Chile has mastered the production of affordable bulk wines, sold around the globe. At the same time, renewed efforts focusing on quality have produced stellar results that keep Chile very competitive in the super-premium wine category. Chile is one of the top ten wine producing nations in the world today.

If your South America trip includes a stop in Uruguay, then be sure to take a day or two to taste Uruguayan wines!

Australian wines are popular far and wide. The popularity of wines from Australian wineries cannot be understated. Learn about the Barossa Valley, Margaret River, Hunter Valley, Clare Valley, and all the other wine growing regions in the country. Find out what each area offers in the way of wine and which wineries to visit on your trip.

New Zealand is right next door to Australia, and this country's wines, especially sauvignon Blancs, are excellent. Find out more about Marlborough wines and Hawke's Bay wineries, as well as other New Zealand regions. Make a wine tour in New Zealand an activity during your vacation — you won't regret it.

Few people know that South Africa has a well developed wine industry along the Cape. Any trip to South Africa should include a couple of days, or more, in Stellenbosch where trying the pinotage must be a priority. Franschhoek is another wonderful area with many wineries to visit

The ideal time of year to take a German wine vacation is in the height of summer. The long days and good weather make for touring the countryside a delightful experience. Winding mountain roads, super highways or tiny country lanes are all accessible by vehicle or public transport. Castles, cathedrals and ruins beg to be explored. Flowers beckon from every windowsill and wooded hillsides are green and lush.

For wine lovers, perhaps the best part of a German summer vacation is the festival season. Literally every city, town, village, burg or hamlet throws open their doors and invites the world to a party. Festivals showcase local wines, beers, foods and music. What better way to examine the German winemaker's art than by tasting multiple offerings while rubbing elbows with the locals?

References:

1. <http://www.worldwidewinetours.com/germany.html>
2. <http://www.worldwidewinetours.com/south-america/argentina.html>
3. <http://www.bkwinetours.com/>